"Hello, old feller!" David said with an awkward attempt at cheer. But he had been through a bad siege of agon izing for Cora and her safety and did not feel the cheer toward the little newcomer which he affected. Perhaps it was a trace of resentment at the cause of so much suffering for Cora which, even now that it was past, still hung like a shadow about his spirit. Or it may have been the undeniable homeliness of the diminutive face on the pillow.
